Richardson disagreed with his father and mother in law. Although ordinarily pescenble, he was addicted to "drunken sprees," at which times he was extremely quarrelsome and turbulent, especially with members of his own family. In these moments of intoxication and anger ha had expressed a determination to do them bodily harm. At one time he went so far as to monace his mother in law's life with an exe, but he was subdued before he could put his threat into execution. Whenever any disturbance arose between him and his wife (and as the two houses were only about ten steps apart they were quite frequent) it was Lucy, the mother in law, who received the greater part of the abuse, and it was towards her that his direst threats were directed. This deplorable condition of things continued until the night of the 19th of last July, when Riobardson Lutin exeoution his oft repeated threats against his mother in law by an atrecious murder, in which he also made a fearful attempt upon the life of Hester, his wife, and Robert Pinacy, his father in law. He procured a spade, with which he struck Lucy two terrible blows, each of which fractured the skull, and either of which would have proved fatal, knecking her into the street, where she was in a few moments found senseless and speechless, and whence she was removed into the house, where she expired in about two hours. Immediately after his attack on Luor. Stephen assaulted the old man, Robert, with the same weapon, striking him also two blows. one of which fractured the skull, but not with a fatal result, as he is yet alive, although in a precarious condition. He then made ac assault upon Hester, his wife, whom he a's) struc's twice, inflicting serious but not fatal wounds. Another colored woman, who was asleed in the second story of the building, being awaken ed by the noise and the crash of the murderon blows, rashed down stairs, shouting "Marder!" and one or two other colored men who happened to be in the vicioity also joined in giving the alarm, upon which Richardson fled. In his flight he passed the house of Beverly Spott, a colored man, who is the owner of a saged out and faithfuldeg. Hearing the alarm. Ecott. who had not yet retired, hastened to the door pursuit, when, after a short race, the dig caught the fogitive. Richardson then asked Scott to call the deg off, as he was not the one that was wanted, but was trying to catch the man. Scott, thinking that Stephen was tolling the truth, called the dog off, when the latter again ran at the top of his speed to get out of the way of his pursuers. Soutt in a momens discovered his mistake, and calling the dog again made chase, when, after a short and exciting race, the lugitive was again seized by the dog and held, although Richardson repeatedly atterapted to strike him with the spade, until Scott and others who had joined in the chase, came up and secured him. He was tried and convicted, and yesterday paid the proalty of his

A BIG SNAKE STORY .- A correspondent from Valley Townshir, Penn., who signs himself, very appropriately, "List," sonds the following: "While out hunting for woodcook, last week, my attention was attracted by a poculiar of noise issuing from a clump of bushes, from the. midst of which rose a meguilcert sycamore trec. Cautiously approaching, I beheld a sight which frezs my blood. Coiled around a trunk of the tree, about ten feet from the ground, was a monster snake of a darkly spotted color, which must have measured at least twenty five feet in ground some distance away, and while I was looking it suddenly partially anchiled its folds and with the rapidity of lightning darted its with another rapid movement it deposited its bit in the same place I observed it do this un-til it had fifteen rabbits in its store house, and ended at the top of the bank at the edge of a
